The Altenburg Case

ask for anything more. It could be dashed off in two minutes, and I'll bet you the writer gave two solid hours to it. Now, I'm the hundredth person, and I'm asking not for more, but for something. This," and he gave the paper a contemptuous tap, "this is nothing."

"And you want to know?"

"Everything? What had the man done that somebody wanted him out of the way?"

"I don't know."

"No, I don't suppose you do, but tell me what you do know, and perhaps I'll find it there, even if you don't." Trafford had found in Beckwith at times some of the qualities that made himself a detective. The presence always awoke in him a sense of curiosity, and he felt it now. If the man was bent on stepping outside his own feet he might as well show him at once how he was.

"For instance, there was the bitterest kind of a quarrel between Altenburg and his nephew of his. What was it about?
There isn't much to tell in this paper."

"'Twould be scandalous to put it in such a statement under the circumstances of this tragedy," responded Beckwith.

Trafford's somewhat heavy face showed just a touch of satisfaction. It required no great shrewdness to guess the fact he had stated, but it was something to know that he was right, and to know it from the man who, he already felt, was pitting himself against him for some purpose or other.

"No, but I want to know all about that quarrel, and the circumstances of the tragedy make such a statement exceedingly fitting, not to say necessary. It's a relief to young Calden that his uncle is out of the way. We'll stick a pin there and keep it in sight for the present. Evidently, too, the family is Altenburg's heirs, and if reports are true they'll come in for a considerable amount of money that can't be unaccounted for. There's possibly something special for which they want it, and while the estate is naturally shocked at the violent death of her brother, and in a way may be sorry, and the daughter, with a young girl's sensitiveness, is almost ready to think kindly of him, young Calden simply yields to the demands of decency, but wouldn't have the thing undone. I want to get at the root of this and get it quick."

Beckwith picked up the printed slip and read it, as if it were something he had never seen before. Then he turned a curious look on Trafford.

"You find all that in this statement?"

"No, not all of it, but good confirmation of the part that isn't there.
I'm satisfied you knew it all when you wrote the document, itself."

"And you complain that we haven't told people anything! Perhaps you find ground here for guessing that young Calden committed the murder," the lawyer muttered, more with the air of asking himself a question than of pro-pounding a suggestion to the other.

Trafford sprang to his feet with more show of impetuosity than he ever allowed himself, excepting for an assured purpose.

"I've scarcely guessed that a murder has been committed," he said brus-quely. "That isn't the way I work.
I want facts, not guesses. I want Horace Calden's statement, and I've come to you because, as his attorney, you're entitled to hear him give it to me. You know there are men who wouldn't have done that in my place.
But it shan't be said I've treated him unfairly, unless you force me to, and in that case I'll be you and not me.
When will he meet me here at your office?"

"I'll find out," replied Beckwith, going to the telephone with "give me eight, four, two."

"So the telephone's working again, is it?"

Beckwith took the connection as an excuse for not answering. When he had finished talking he turned to Trafford with the information that the latter had already caught.

"At 3 this afternoon."

"You'll do well to impress him with the need of frankness," suggested Trafford. "It'll save time—and bother."

VII.

TRAFFORD AND CALDEN MEET.

Trafford was rather favorably impressed by the first sight of Calden, a tall, well-built fellow, who had the air of reserving rather than making a display of his strength. He had a dark, convincing face, and talked with all the freedom that the painful nature of his story permitted.

"My father is Harold Calden, who was president of the Merrymount National Bank of Boston, a place that he gave up to accept the trusteeship of the Great Venezuela Syndicate.
That was thirteen years ago, when I was twelve."

In spite of his trained self-control Trafford almost started at this simple avowal of relationship with one of the greatest defaulters of the age. It was as if a flash of light showed again the ruin of the vast enterprise; the disappearance beyond recovery of hundreds of thousands of dollars; the bravado with which the defaulter refused the chance to escape, offered him by some of the men who had suffered most by his misdeeds, and the sudden ending of the trial in a declaration of insanity, which sent him to an asylum instead of a prison.
Trafford knew the story perfectly.

"Oh, yes," said the lad, his voice tense with the bitterness of modern "I know, but I shall never be old enough to make a lie the truth, and it is a lie that my father ever took a dollar of that money! I—pshaw, you wouldn't believe me if I protested all day. Excuse me.

Painful Dyspepsia

A Form of Indigestion Caused by Gas.

Irritation from Undigested

Food in the Stomach

No kind of dyspepsia it better marked than that known as "painful indigestion," and it is also a very common affection. In general, it is of a dull character, is felt after meals, and along with the pain, soreness at the pit of the stomach often exists, and in some cases the soreness is permanent.
The tenderness is commonly restricted to a spot in the middle line of the body, immediately below the breast-bone.

It often extends upward under the bone, which consequently feels sore on pressure, or the tenderness is felt toward either side. This tenderness is commonly associated with an unpleasant feeling of heat—"a burning sensation"—as it is termed by some persons. There is also "gnawing" and "dragging," as well as various other anomalous sensations complained of after taking food, and generally within an hour after eating.

As might be supposed the intensity of the symptom is proportionate to the quantity and quality of the food ingested. When the stomach is empty, a sensation of craving or emptiness gives most trouble. This often causes a false appetite, which, by inducing the person to eat heartily aggravates the sufferings. Thirst generally causes much anxiety; heartburn, water-brash, acidity, nausea, and headache are frequent attendants. The tongue is usually coated and from a mere inspection of this organ the condition of the stomach can often be correctly told.

It is a common error with persons who suffer from stomach pain caused by indigestion and gastric irritation, to use such drugs as chlorodyne, Hor-man's Anodyne, and other "pain killers" for their relief. Such treatment is a great mistake. While these drugs and other temporary relief to the dyspeptic pain, they have no effect whatever in removing the cause.

STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS remove the cause. By completely digesting all the food in the stomach, there is no further possibility of the occurrence of this disagreeable form of dyspepsia with its painful manifestations, and other concurrent symptoms. All of the irritation of the stomach-lining and stomach cramps as the result of the undigested food lying in that organ and undergoing fermentation and decomposition, is quickly done away with.

But not only is the form of dyspepsia which is accompanied by pain cured through the use of these digestive tablets, but also every other form of indigestion, and all the various kinds of which stomach pain does not occur, but where there are many symptoms equally disagreeable, discomforting, disconcerting and discouraging.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain in a highly concentrated form, powerful anti-dyspeptic ingredients, which digest rapidly and thoroughly food of every kind, including proteins, nitrates, carbo-hydrates, etc. A single grain will disintegrate and digest 3,000 grains of food.
